

All One

Mapping the Financial District's Many Developments In Progress

BY AMY PLITT · @PLITTER · MAR 9, 2016, 3:02P

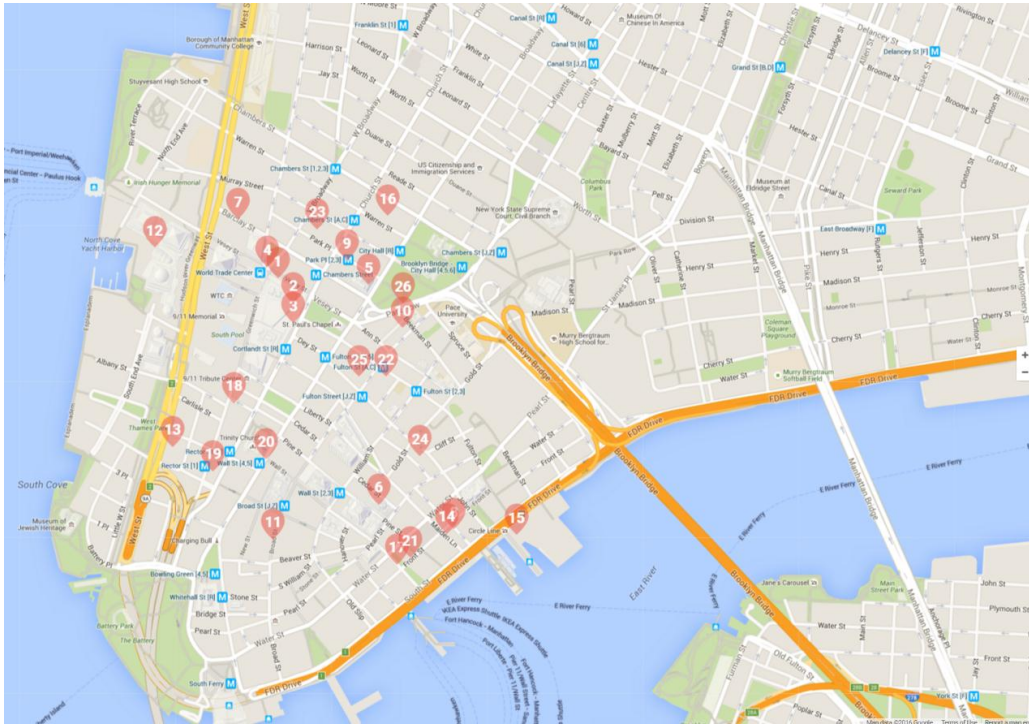

Erin Cadigan / Shutterstock.com

In the nearly 15 years since the September 11 attacks, the Financial District has seen an unprecedented rebirth—from the South Street Seaport to the east to the World Trade Center to the west, the number of developments that have cropped up or are in progress has boomed. And while the WTC site can be used as proof of the area's renaissance, that wouldn't take into account the number of buildings rising closer to the East River (including a couple of supertalls), or the controversial revamp of the South Street Seaport.

To get a fuller picture of what's happening in Lower Manhattan, we've mapped a whole bunch of the developments that are currently in progress downtown—and if we've missed something, leave a comment or hit the tipline.

13 50 West

Helmut Jahn's 780-foot West Street tower will have 191 units, which will be a mix of one- to four-bedroom apartments, along with two penthouses. It'll also have plenty of amenities, including an observatory on the 64th floor with views that may rival those of its neighbor One World Trade Center.

50 West Street
50 West St, New York, NY 10006

VISIT WEBSITE DIRECTIONS

SHARE THIS PLACE